

Spend some time reflecting on these questions by yourself and then share your reflections with your colleagues.

Does your NGO have a clear legal objective that aligns with the organisation's mission? And would litigation be the most effective way to achieve that goal compared to other strategies?

What are the potential financial, reputational, or political risks of pursuing litigation for your organisation? And is your team prepared to navigate these challenges?

Aside from strategic litigation as a strategy, how can your NGO drive broader systemic change beyond the courtroom?

Enjoy!
